The holiday and travel season in Germany begins at the same time as the start of the FIFA World Cup. Anyone wanting to travel cheaply within Germany had better not wait much longer and should get down to the Saturn nearby during the period from 7 to 12 June. It is during this period that customers can purchase a four-pack of train tickets for just 122 euros exclusively at Saturn – while stocks last. The happy owners of Saturn DB train tickets can travel throughout Germany on any weekday (except Friday) from 12 June 2010 until 31 August 2010. The tickets are valid for a total of four individual trips second class in any Deutsche Bahn train (except City Night Line trains and trips to the North Sea Islands). The exchange, refund or resale of the tickets is, of course, excluded. Customers may purchase a maximum of five books of tickets. And as if this were not enough: Anyone purchasing one of the highly-coveted books of tickets will also receive a fan pack containing a fan shirt, fan makeup and a World Cup match schedule free of charge from Saturn. This ensures that no one will miss an important game and that they can cheer for the German national team in style.

Anyone wanting to secure a book of four tickets together with the fan pack before they officially go on sale on 7 June will have the opportunity from 1:00 p.m. on Tuesday, 1 June 2010, to 8:00 p.m. on Sunday, 6 June 2010, to order tickets in advance at www.saturn.de.
